

College Information

For prospective college students, it may be overwhelming with the idea of learning about different colleges and trying to gather enough information on the right college for you. However, there are many resources available to help you make an informed decision on your college selection.

Talk to your Guidance Counselor

Every school has guidance counselors for their students. Make an appointment and sit down and talk with them about your future. They are there to help guide you in the right direction. They can help steer you towards the schools that have the areas of study you want. Some guidance counselors can even provide you with letters of recommendation that you will need for your college application. They can also help you with your financial aid forms and any applications and essays you may need to complete. Your high school guidance office is a valuable resource for your college search.

College Tours

These are trips that are usually sponsored by local high schools or even community volunteers. They will take students by bus to many popular colleges in the area for a first hand visit. Students may even get to stay overnight in one of the dorms, eat on campus and they receive tons of information from actual students and professors on campus. This is a perfect opportunity for students to gain hands on knowledge from colleges and universities in their general area. Visit College-Visits.com for more information on this unique opportunity.

College Fairs

Many schools and community centers host huge college fairs every year. Colleges and universities will set up an information booth and students can walk around and talk to the representatives and learn and ask questions and receive immediate information. In some cases, you can even submit your application at this time as well. Check with your high school guidance office to see when the next college fair will be in your area.

Internet

Take advantage of the technological age and use the Internet to field your college search. There is a wealth of information at your fingertips. Every college has a website and you can learn so much simply by visiting their site and browsing pictures of the college and other information available to you. Most colleges will also have a way for you to request information about their college where they can mail you a course catalog and other pertinent information.

Word of Mouth

Ask your parents and other family members which college or university they attended. They can provide you with pros and cons of their college, which can help you make a better decision. They can also give you general college information that will help you prepare for the college experience.

Be proactive in your quest for information. The more you learn, the more informed your decision will be and in the end the happier you will be. Attend college fairs, request information from colleges and use the power of the Internet. These are all great resources for aiding in your search for the perfect college.
